A Volume in the PERSPECTIVES IN IMMUNOLOGY Series

IMMUNOBIOLOGY OF THE TUMOR-HOST RELATIONSHIP

Edited by
RICHARD T. SMITH
MAURICE LANDY

Proceedings of an International Conference Held at the Sormani
Palace, Milan, Italy, January 14-18, 1974

1974, 376 pp., $23.50/£11.30

There is a growing conviction in the minds of physicians that a central issue in cancer is essentially immunologic. This consensus arises both from intuitive medical thought and from substantial experimental and clinical data showing that cancer is a consequence of host immunologic derangement. Moreover, manipulations involving immunologic components of the tumor-host relationship can be shown to affect the balance in favor of or against the host.

This volume, is the sixth in the PERSPECTIVES IN IMMUNOLOGY series, represents a rigorously edited version of an entire week of intensive and wide-ranging discussion. It offers to the clinician and experimentalist, as well as to the immunologist and tumor biologist, a critical assessment of the data base on the immunobiology of the tumor-host relation—fully revealed in an awesome complexity. It also presents recent findings that led to the abandonment of some long held but now untenable views, and to the formulation of some new, meaningful principles. These will be useful to guide present and future efforts in dissecting out the biological elements that determine the dominance of tumor over host, and especially to the development of applications to human cancer.

Cell Physiology

MOLECULAR DYNAMICS

HENRY TEDESCHI

"CELL PHYSIOLOGY: Molecular Dynamics assumes two common logical threads throughout the various aspects of cell physiology: first, that of a unit of inheritance, including the mechanisms of transmission of genetic information and its implementation in forming the functional machinery of the cell, and second, that of a transducer by which energy is captured and transformed into a biologically usable form."

Henry Tedeschi
State University of New York, Albany

FEATURES A THREE PART ORGANIZATION:

organization of the cell

The Cell as a unit of inheritance

The Cell as a biochemical transducer
